Foreword

The Women and Gender Equality Commission has undertaken this important initiative to compile this document for research and historical purposes. It is our view that we will do a disservice to Guyana's young women and future historians who will want to revisit the history of women in political life.

This document is intended to provide a synopsis of those women who were bold enough to participate in public life. It is a well-known fact that public service necessitates courage, tenacity, and an unwavering commitment to a cause greater than oneself.

When a woman steps onto this stage, she inspires countless others. Her mere presence challenges traditional norms, shattering the proverbial "glass ceiling" that has kept her confined for far too long. By being a visible force in public life, she opens doors and paves the way for future generations, demonstrating that their voices matter, their perspectives are valuable, and they can hold positions of power in the public arena.

The historical reality is premised on the fact that Guyana was a British colony. Women first gained a limited franchise in 1928, when eligibility to vote included owning property, income qualifications as well as the ability to read and write. These criteria effectively ruled out any functionally illiterate woman. The franchise was extended in 1945, and by the 1947 elections, the financial qualification had been reduced but remained significantly higher than the average wage, while the property qualification and literary requirements had continued to effectively disenfranchise women who could not read or write.

On July 12, 1946, the Women's Political and Economic Organization (WPEO) was established against the backdrop of the second world war. The three women who spearheaded the formation were Ms. Frances van Stafford, Ms. Winifred Gaskin, and Mrs. Janet Jagan. The mission of the WPEO was to ensure the political and economic organization of women to advance their economic well-being as well as their political and social emancipation and betterment.

In 1947, the Women's Political and Economic Organization (WPEO) began promoting female voter registration. It was at this election that Mrs. Janet Jagan entered the political sphere for the first time. She ran for the Central Georgetown seat. Despite having a significant impact, her bid was unsuccessful. The WPEO set about encouraging women to register to vote in the 1947 elections. The WPEO also urged women in charitable organisations to put pressure on the government to improve social welfare in general and housing conditions in particular.

In the 1947 elections, two members of the WPEO decided to contest seats in the Legislative Council. Mrs. Janet Jagan and Ms. Frances van Stafford contested the South Georgetown seat. This seat was also contested by Mr. H.N Critchlow and was strongly supported by Ms. Gaskin. This led to strong differences between the two women and was exacerbated by an election petition against Ms. Stafford. These differences led to tensions within the organization and subsequently the resignation of some executive members resulting in the abortion of the short-lived WPEO.

The WPEO was instrumental in educating women about their rights and potential. It provided women with a sense of purpose, elevating them above the purely social and altruistic associations that were prevalent at the time. Despite its failure to become a permanent body, its influence on broadening the horizons of Guyanese women cannot be overlooked.

Another important development was the formation of the Political Affairs Committee in 1946. Its main goal was to establish a political party. On January 1st, 1950, the PAC successfully accomplished its goal by forming the Peoples Progressive Party (PPP).

The PPP began the task of building a strong party that would work towards uniting the working people and ending British Colonial rule. Thus began the fight for independence. The 1953 election campaign sparked a level of enthusiasm never seen before in the country. For the first time in Guyana's history the people were really involved. It was the first election under universal adult suffrage. The Party secured 18 of the available 24 seats. Three women were elected to the House of Assembly, Mrs. Janet Jagan, Ms. Jessie Burnham, and Ms. Jane Philips Gay. These three women were the first to enter Parliament.

The Daily Chronicle of May 19, 1953, cited Sir Eustace Woolford QC OBE. Speaker of the House of Assembly when the PPP members took their oath of office. He said "You enjoy the distinction of being the first members of any legislature who can accurately claim that you are the true representatives of the inhabitants of the colony. It will therefore be recognized how heavy are the responsibilities." The Chronicle went on to say that the 32-year-old Janet Jagan, General Secretary of the PPP, exceeded past achievements of women in the political field when she was elected to be the Deputy Speaker of British Guiana's first House of Assembly.

Unfortunately, the new found freedom was short-lived. Just 133 days after the election, the British arrived with gunboats, suspended the Constitution on October 9, 1953, overthrew the newly elected government, and placed five leaders in detention while others were hounded, persecuted and their homes constantly raided by police. They were restricted and could not move out of their limited areas without permission from the police.

An interim government was installed by the British and two women were appointed as legislators. From 1957 to present, Women have been elevated by their respective parties to the National Assembly and Legislative Council since 1957. Despite their low beginnings, the number of women gradually increased, and between 1975 and 1985—the year that was designated as the Decade for Women—more and more women were participating in their parties at higher levels and eventually being elected to the National Assembly and the Parliament of Guyana.

We salute all the women both past and present for their courageous stand. We are mindful of the challenges a woman who decides to enter public life faces. Her life is no longer private, and all of her actions, decisions, and remarks become subjected to public scrutiny. She adds to the greater discussion about the expectations of women in leadership roles and by so doing contributes to the rewriting of history, dispelling myths, and advancing a society that is more just and inclusive.

Our efforts to get images of the women of the earlier periods were fraught with logistical challenges. We have recorded the names and issues that each of the women dealt with. It is our sincere hope that upcoming generations will see to it that our history is better recorded and made accessible to those who might need it.
